Pinkstan James

b 7 Nov 1763 PR; c 3 Dec 1763 London St George Hanover Square

(3 Dec 1763, London St George Hanover Square) Pinkstan son of Dr Robert James and Ann Stephens)

Dr. James.— On the 14th inst. died, aged 64, Dr. Pinkstan James, of George-street, Hanover-square.— This eminent physician entered active life, as a midshipman, in the royal navy, about the same time with his present Majesty. The first engagement that he saw was likewise the first in which King William IV. stood the fire of the enemy—namely, the action in which Langara, the Spanish Admiral, was defeated and taken. He was then in the Invincible; but soon after quitted that ship and served for some years in the Pegasus frigate, commanded by Captain Stanhope. In this vessel he saw a great deal of service in the West Indies, and had twice the yellow fever. It is somewhat singular, also, that the present King afterwards sailed in the same ship. On his return from the West Indies he quitted the navy and studied medicine at the College of Edinburgh, where he took his degree. He then passed the College of London, and has ever since practised in the metropolis. During the Regency of his late Majesty he was appointed one of his Physicians extraordinary, and shortly after was elected physician to the parish of St. George, Hanover square.

Cambridge Chronicle and Journal 30 July 1830

Kinvaston belonged to Edward James in the seventeenth century. Here was born in 1703 Dr. Robert James, well known for his "Fever Powder"; he was educated at St. John's College, Oxford, and became a Licentiate of the College of Physicians. His father was a Major in the army, his mother a sister of sir Robert Clarke. He practised physic in Lichfield, and was the friend of Dr. Samuel Johnson, and died in London in 1776.
